SCOUTING IN THE CUMBERLAND VALLEY.

A Purnell Legion Boy Has Varied and Interesting Experiences With Lee's Advance Guard—At Appomattox.

Editor National Tribune: I was one of Father Abraham's boys, and very much enjoyed reading recitals and reminiscences. But to take all and give nothing makes me feel selfish; therefore I come to "tell my piece."

I am intensely interested in the Flag and statue questions. Sunday, about 3 p. m., April 21, 1861, I saw Old Glory hauled down from a 35-foot pole in my native town, Towson, seven miles north of Baltimore, Md., and hidden by its friends for two weeks, lest it should be destroyed by the raving Secessionists. I looked on in silence, and said to myself: "It will go back again." My brave Union mother, with 12 more of the same kind, then brought it forth, hauled it up the pole again, and the old flag of old and new, where it was creased by heavenly zephyrs, remained by the fumes of a Scotch grog shop across the street.

kept the trail. Struck another bunch east of Greencastle a few miles. We lost one horse, and as they had too many long guns for us they got away. They quit. Gettysburg was over, and the enemy was allowed to cross the Potomac in comparative peace. Why? Oh, how disappointed I was. A recent revelation answers the question. Our great commander, the President, ordered Meade to pursue immediately; he didn't. Then the greatest soldier of them all imperatively ordered an attack with all force, assuming all responsibility. Again Meade absolutely refused. Antietam repeated. We'll never know here below what an awful burden Mr. Lincoln carried.

The Good Pennsylvanians.

We shall never forget the good yeomen and townspeople of Pennsylvania. What great big loaves of bread, fat, juicy pies, cold ham, delicious butter, eggs and preserves they bountifully fed us on for over two weeks! And our comrades got their share of oats and hay, too. For such a long time we were willing to do it all over again under similar circumstances.

We had one man killed, two wounded.

It was then I resolved to defend the Flag of Washington with my life, and do my little best to haul down and chastise the States Rights ensign fluttering over that grog shop.

June 15, 1863, found me with the First, Second and Seventh Regiments in Chambersburg, Pa., on provost duty. We belonged to Co. C, Purnell Legion Cavalry, and went there from Maryland Heights, Maryland, at the winter. We heard the rebels were coming up the Valley, and in the morning were packed up and ready to go. While awaiting orders at the Military Square, mounted refugees, camp followers and others, fleeing from Winchester, dashed pell-mell into the square in great numbers. We barred their way. The Lieutenant gave me two men with orders to stop the runaways. With swords brandishing we galloped, head on, shouting and entreating. One of my men's horses rammed a rebel's, killed his horse and himself knocked out. I charged on with the other for a mile, when he fell out. Alone I continued. I met Milroy's wagon train. The drivers had cut loose from their wagons, and were rushing away like mad. I kept shouting: "What are you running for?" "Rebels coming," I would reply: "No rebels coming; you're looking the wrong way."

A Demoralizing Sight.
Thus I continued some two miles, the whole way strewn with Commissary and Quartermaster stores and wagons. What a sight! It was facing south, on the road leading to Greencastle and the Potomac River. I started out to find the enemy and, none appearing, I went on going until I reached Greencastle. There I met Capt. Boyd, 1st N. Y. Cav., with 60 picked men, quietly reported to him, and he ordered me to go on. We mounted and trotted slowly northward. Johnnies appeared to our right, and we were trying to flank us. As our road obliqued to west, by spurting up we easily escaped and reached Chambersburg near dark. We found there the military and a battery. Capt. Boyd told them to get on the cars and go to Harrisburg, as they were no match for the coming army. They obeyed.

The rebels were Lee's advance, chosen men of cavalry and infantry, sent to forage for the main army. And right well they did their work. They took the wagon-train, and everything was cleared up. My Lieutenant had forced the wagonmaster to hand back, and as (2) told the invaders in cheer, they had time to gather up the loot.

The good people of Chambersburg fed us and our horses in the street. Then we made quick time to Harrisburg. No troops were in the Valley to resist us, and we reached there early next day. The whole Valley was unprotected, and the enemy had a free hand.

For the next two weeks we scouted and skirmished with foraging parties. July 1, we struck a foraging party to Gettysburg. July 2, near Fayetteville, we captured 43 foragers with a lot of horses. We put them in a warehouse in Shippensburg. For the night, the citizens fed us and our horses on the street here, too. I took the fragments (plenty of them), and fed the prisoners by lamplight. One prisoner actually wept. I said: "What are you crying for?" "We didn't think you 'uns would treat us 'uns this way. Our officers told us you 'uns had horns, and that good farmer told us, when old Dobbin jogged home again. One rebel we caught in a cherry tree, our charge was so sudden. Turned them all over to the rear guard before night, and kept on the trail. Next day was Sunday, July 5. We scouted some; went several miles and brought load of flour for militia. Next day we struck another band of foragers, had a brush, captured 43, sent them to the rear and the last wounded rebel I saw. This man clearly understood that the flag he had fought so hard for was destroyed—had no more place on the earth. He proclaimed his allegiance to the Union.
